DAN SMOOT

WHEN THE ROLL IS CALLED Revenue Bill

The worst feature of the Revenue Bill of 1962 (HR 10650) was a provision for withholding income tax on investment, dividend, and interest earnings. This would have required banks and other institutions to deduct 20% of the interest and dividend earnings from approximately 500 million accounts. Most of the accounts belong to individuals who would not owe the tax deducted. After the business institutions went to the expense of collecting the tax and sending it to Internal Revenue Service, and the individuals went to the expense of filing for rebates, then the Internal Revenue Service would have the expense of refunding taxes collected from people who did not owe it.

The House of Representatives, by a stand of 224 to 202 passed the Revenue Bill of 1962 (HR 10650) on March 29, 1962.(1)

Administration forces were jubilant. The Revenue Bill needed only to be approved by the Senate, before the President could sign it into law. Prospects seemed bright.

But word got out; and the sleeping giant which is the American public began to awaken to the significance of the tax bill already passed by the House and awaiting final action in the Senate.

By mid-April, 1962, the body politic was stirring uneasily. By the third week in April, the uneasiness was becoming anger; and the Senate was being flooded with taxpayers' protests against the new withholding provision in the Revenue Bill.

The Administration's main argument for the new withholding provision was an appeal to class-conscious jealousy: Wage earners (that is, "workers") have federal income tax taken out of their paychecks: then why shouldn't those whose income is in the form of interest, and return on investments (that is, non-working "capitalists") have the tax taken out before they get their money?

The argument is dishonest, because the "workers" in America (already subject to withholding tax on their wages) own most of the 500 million accounts which would be subject to the new withholding provision.[2]

This argument backfired on Administration leaders. Many people, already aroused about the new withholding law, began to realize that the withholding tax already in existence (which was instituted as a war-time measure in 1942, and which violates many basic provisions of our Constitution) has become the foundation stone of the corrupting and despoiling federal income tax system.[2]

Constitutionalists (working to effect repeal of the income-tax amendment) have had difficulty in arousing the support of millions of wage-earners who carry most of the crushing tax load, without being fully aware of their burden.[2]

If Congress would repeal the law that "authorizes" the unconstitutional practice of withholding tax from paychecks, American wage earners would come to an abrupt realization of what they are being forced to pay for extravagance, waste, corruption, and subsidies to foreign dictators. There would be a sudden, and irresistible, public demand for repeal of the inequitable income-tax system.[2]

The public protest against the proposed new withholding tax on interest and dividends developed into a growing demand that the existing withholding tax on wages be repealed.

Displaying his customary political courage and understanding of constitutional principles, United States Representative Bruce Alger (Republican, Texas) introduced HR 11492, on April 30, 1962, to eliminate the withholding of income tax from wages and salaries.

There was considerable public support for Mr. Alger's Bill, but not enough. The Bill was never reported out of committee.

On August 29, 1962, the Senate, by a roll-call stand of 71 to 23, deleted the new withholding provision from the Revenue Bill of 1962. This roll-call is tabulated in Column 4, under "Senate," below, where a "C" indicates a conservative vote to delete the new withholding provision.

Apparently angered by this defeat, Senator Paul Douglas (Democrat, Illinois) on August 29, proposed an Amendment to the Revenue Bill to repeal the withholding tax on wages. Douglas was cleverly anticipating the indecision and weakness of so-called conservatives. Using the class-conscious argument that the provision to withhold tax on interest and dividends was intended to put "workers" and "capitalists" on an equal footing, Douglas was saying, in effect: All right, let us see whether you, who will not extend the withholding tax to "capitalists," will be consistent and fair enough to remove the withholding tax from the wages of "workers."

Actually, however, the cynical Douglas proposal was indentical with the one made, honestly and sincerely, by Bruce Alger when he introduced HR 11492, to eliminate the withholding tax on wages.

It is a pity that there were not enough constitutionalists in the United States Senate to call Senator Douglas's bluff. Unfortunately, the Senate, by a stand of 70-20, killed the Douglas amendment.

The vote on Douglas's defeated amendment is tabulated in Column 5, under "Senate," below. A "C" indicates a conservative vote for the Douglas amendment, even though Douglas introduced the amendment with cynical intent and voted for it himself. If the Douglas amendment had passed in the Senate, it would have done more for the cause of constitutional conservatism in the United States than any other piece of legislation ever enacted by the Senate.

Foreign Aid

On July 12, 1962, the House passed the Foreign Assistance Act of 1962, as HR 11921, by a stand of 259 to 173. This roll-call is tabulated in Column 1, under "House," below, where a "C" indicates a conservative vote against the Bill.

There were material differences between the House Bill (HR 11921) and the Senate Bill (S 2996); so, a compromise (or "Conference Report" Bill) had to be worked out.

On July 20, 1962, the Senate passed the Conference Report version of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1962, by a stand of 62 to 36. This vote is tabulated in Column 1, under "Senate," below, where a "C" indicates a conservative vote against the bill.

On July 24, 1962, the House passed the Conference Report version by a stand of 240 to 181, which is tabulated in Column 4, under "House," below, a "C" being a conservative vote against.

A Senator or Representative who voted for one version of the Foreign Aid Bill, but against another version, reflects the dangerous confusion of men who seem to know that something is wrong with the Foreign Aid program but who have not yet found the courage or conviction to stand squarely against it: they keep seeking vainly to "reform" a program which serves the cause of international communism (a program actually recommended by Joseph Stalin in the 1920's as a means of communizing the world). Our foreign aid programs cannot be "reformed." They must be abolished, if we are to build a genuine national defense and save our Republic.

Farm Bill

On July 19, 1962, the House passed the Food and Agriculture Act of 1962 (HR 12391) by a stand of 246 to 180, which is tabulated in Column 3, under "House," below, a "C" indicating a conservative vote against.

On August 22, 1962, the Senate passed this Bill by a stand of 56 to 43, tabulated in Column 2, under "Senate," below.

HR 12391 expands the corrupt, unconstitutional programs which are socializing American agriculture. But it is not as bad as the "new" farm program which was devised by Dr. Willard W. Cochrane, which was proposed to Congress by the President on January 30, 1962, which the Senate authorized by roll-call vote on May 25, 1962, but which the House defeated by roll-call vote on June 21.[3]

Drug Bill

On August 23, 1962, the Senate, by a stand of 100 to 0, passed Kefauver's Drug Industry Act of 1962 (S 1552), to tighten federal controls over the manufacture and distribution of drugs. The Bill stretches the meaning of the "interstate commerce" clause in our Constitution beyond its clear intent. Hence, it is unconstitutional. It transfers control over drugs from private industry and the medical profession to bureaucrats in Washington, thus creating rich opportunity for bureaucratic favoritism and corruption. It will decrease, rather than increase, free-market competition, thus harming small businesses and those large ones not in favor at Washington; and it will reduce creative research and development; and it will give less protection to the public than the controls of private responsibility and free-market competition now give.

The roll-call on this Drug Bill is tabulated in Column 3, under "Senate," below. There were no conservative votes against it. The Bill is still pending in the House, and may die there, if the people have time to let the House know that they do not want it passed.

Public Works

On May 28, 1962, the Senate, by a stand of 53 to 39, passed the Standby Public Works Act of 1962 (S 2965, later called the "Accelerated Public Works Act," and "Public Works Coordination and Acceleration Act"). This roll-call is tabulated in this Report dated July 9, 1962.

On August 29, 1962, the House passed the Act as HR 10113, by voice vote. Before passage, the House took a roll-call on a move to kill the Act. This roll-call is tabulated in Column 7, under "House," below, where a "C" indicates a conservative vote against the Public Works Act.

The House Bill (authorizing the President to spend 900 million dollars for job-creating public works in areas where the President says they are needed to relieve unemployment) was different in several ways from the Senate Bill; but the Senate accepted the House version without change, on September 10, 1962, by a roll-call stand of 71 to 27, which is tabulated in Column 6, under "Senate," below.

Clearly unconstitutional, the Bill gives the President another enormous slush fund with which to bribe and threaten Congress, cities, and businessmen into support of Administration schemes.

Thurgood Marshall

On September 11, 1962, the Senate by a roll-call stand of 80-16, approved Kennedy's appointment of Thurgood Marshall (of the NAACP) as a Judge of the Second U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The roll-call is tabulated in Column 7, under "Senate," below, a "C" indicating a conservative vote against confirmation. Marshall is unfit for a high judicial post, because of his long career as a biased agitator, and unqualified because of no judicial experience.

Welfare Bill

On July 19, 1962, the House by a roll-call stand of 358 to 36, passed the Public Welfare Amendments Act of 1962 (HR 10606). The vote is tabulated in Column 2, under "House," below. A "C" indicates a conservative vote against the Bill.[4]

Anti-Poll Tax Amendment

On August 27, 1962, the House, by a roll-call stand of 310 to 92, approved S J RES 29, to submit a constitutional amendment which would outlaw state poll taxes. This is the proper and constitutional way to outlaw state poll taxes, if the people want them outlawed. But such an amendment would be a dangerous and radical departure from the principles of our original Constitution, which (for reasons immeasurably important to the whole American constitutional system) left with state governments the responsibility of determining voter qualifications.

The roll-call on this Anti-Poll Tax Amendment resolution is tabulated in Column 5, under "House," below, a "C" being a conservative vote against.

Old Age Housing Act

On August 27, 1962, the House, by a roll-call stand of 371 to 6, passed the Senior Citizens Housing Act of 1962 (HR 12628) increasing authorization for loans to build rental housing for the elderly in urban areas, and to establish new housing aids (under the Farmers Home Administration) in rural areas. All federal activities in the housing field are unconstitutional, because nothing in our Constitution authorizes them.

The roll-call on this Act is tabulated in Column 6, under "House," below, a "C" indicating a conservative, constitutionalist vote against the Bill.
